Unions Assist Women Score Important Gains

Washington, D. C.—Great progress has been made by labor unions in seeing that women share fully in the benefits of favorable working conditions. It is a fact that the women's share of the gains of the U. S. Labor Department.

Among the gains which women have scored through unions are a voice in collective bargaining, better jobs with equal opportunities for promotion, higher wages, more for the job, shorter hours, vacations with pay, better working conditions, and other gains.

On the other side, the gains which women have scored through unions are a voice in collective bargaining, better jobs with equal opportunities for promotion, higher wages, more for the job, shorter hours, vacations with pay, better working conditions, and other gains.

The legal right of women to join a union and to bargain collectively is guaranteed by the Wagner Act of 1935 (National Labor Relations Act). In the first 10 years of the Wagner Act, more than 6,000,000 workers, including thousands of women, voted in elections held by the National Labor Relations Board, an agency set up under the Wagner Act to conduct elections among workers for the purpose of determining their collective bargaining agent.
